My Halloween Costume Can Be Comfortable

Looks and Feels

My dragon costume has purple spikes. I like how it looks. When I put it on, the collar feels scratchy against my neck. I pull my chin away. Looking good and feeling good are different things.

I Can Show Mum

Mum is nearby. I can say, “This feels scratchy.” I can point to my neck, too. Mum looks where I am pointing. “Let’s help that feel better,” she says.

Off for a Moment

Mum helps me take the costume off. Underneath, my T-shirt is soft. I rub my neck gently. We can pause. I do not have to put the costume straight back on.

My Choice

Mum asks whether I want the dragon costume or my soft shirt. I choose the shirt. Some people wear costumes for Halloween. Some wear their everyday clothes. Today, these are my Halloween clothes.

Still a Dragon

On the clear rug, I stretch out my arms. These can be my dragon wings. Mum stretches hers, too. We make a very slow dragon turn. My clothes feel soft while we play.

Comfort Comes Along

Later, I sit beside Mum with a book. The costume is in its basket. My yellow socks curl up on the sofa. I liked being a dragon. I liked being comfortable, too.
