Jai Says Goodnight to the Diwali Lights

A Big Yawn

Diwali night was nearly over. Jai gave a great big yawn. "Time for bed," said Nani. "But first," said Jai, "can I say goodnight to Diwali?"

Goodnight, Little Diyas

"Goodnight, little diyas," said Jai. Nani gently put out each tiny flame. Puff, puff, puff. "Thank you for shining so bright," whispered Jai.

Goodnight, Rangoli

"Goodnight, rangoli," said Jai, at the front step. The flower rangoli looked up at him, pink and orange and green. "See you in the morning."

Goodnight, Sweets

"Goodnight, sweets," said Jai. Nani covered the plate of ladoos with a cloth. Laddoo the dog sniffed it very hard. "Not for dogs, Laddoo!" Jai giggled.

Goodnight, Mei

Upstairs, Jai looked out of the round window. Next door, Mei was looking out of her window too. "Goodnight, Mei!" Jai waved. "Goodnight, Jai!" Mei waved back.

Goodnight, Star Lantern

"Goodnight, star lantern," said Jai. Down by the blue door, the star lantern glowed softly. "Can it stay on?" asked Jai. "Yes," said Nani. "It will keep watch all night."

Goodnight, Sky

"Goodnight, sky," said Jai. There was no moon tonight, but there were stars, lots and lots of stars. Far away, one last little sparkle twinkled, and was gone.

Goodnight, Diwali

Jai climbed into bed. Asha was already asleep, and Laddoo curled up at his feet. "Goodnight, Diwali," Jai whispered. And the whole house glowed soft and warm, all through the night.
